Entered as Second Class Matter October 11, 1879, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Established October 5, 1889.

By Henry F. Donovan.

The Chicago Eagle numbers among its subscribers the most influential, most prosperous and most respected men in Chicago. It reaches nearly every man of standing in the community and all men who are leaders of public opinion or directors of public affairs.

It is the guide, mentor and friend of every political leader of every shade of opinion. It is read by Government, Senate, County and City officials. It is read by a big percentage of the legal fraternity, including bench and bar.

It is the favorite of Chicago's leading business men. It reaches all classes in their homes. It is read by the Fire Department. It is read by the Police Department.

It is in every public office and every public library. It is not controlled by any class, church or creed, advertising agency.

In the twenty years of its existence it has managed to build up a large circulation and great business without the aid of professional advertising sharks.

That is why it is so independent, so popular and so strong.

The Chicago Eagle is one paper that has never depended upon advertising agents for a circulation. It has one of its own.

HOW WILL HE ACT?

Amid the sounds of mourning at London has been heard a note of apprehension concerning the new king and his probable attitude towards the questions which have vexed the nation for so many months. The late king's diplomacy and open-mindedness were greatly relied on to steer the ship of state out of the dangerous whirlpool which involved the constitutional question of the lords. His son is said to be of more obstinate character than the father, resembling in this his old predecessors whose name he bears; but so little is known of George V.'s attributes that this assertion may be based upon nothing better than the name he has chosen. Should it be true that one of the old Hanoverian obstinacy and wrong-headedness has come to England's throne it would, indeed, be a serious thing for the country. The Georges, and William IV. as well, tried England sorely for more than a century, and it was not till the crown descended to Victoria that the menace of the dynasty passed from the realm. Ignorance, gluttony, infidelity, indifference, and obstinacy marked the successive reigns of the four previous Georges, and William's was little better in most respects. That the English nation, in spite of its rulers, in spite of internal turmoil and foreign wars, became on land and sea, in commerce, in culture, and in morals the superior to many of its rivals is the highest compliment to the sterling qualities which animate its people. It is a grave situation which faces the new ruler and his subjects, but the good wishes of the world go out to both with the hope that he has learned from the teaching and example of his father that moderation, that consideration for all parties which formed so striking an attribute of his kingship.

A TIRELESS QUESTION.

It was remarked not long ago that mankind is all at sea concerning what it is best to eat. It is now proper to observe that it is equally uncertain when to eat it. From the frugalists, who think one meal a day is enough, to those tireless feeders who stoke the human machine with breakfast, luncheon, afternoon tea, dinner and supper, the variety is endless. Not only that, but when is dinner? In the consulship of Plancus townfolk were distinguished from countryfolk by taking their principal meal at 1 o'clock, instead of at 12. Nor has the robust dinner of the fathers yielded to the ineffectual luncheon, on the farms or in the smaller towns of the country. Outside the suburban radius the 12-o'clock whistle summons to something more having. But in the cities the 6-o'clock dinner, fashionable not so very long ago, is already obsolete. Seven o'clock is tolerable; eight de rigueur; those who advocate high living and little or no thinking are even agitating for 9. There is hardly an hour of the day that has not at some time been the dinner-hour. The ancient Romans dined in the forenoon, and the simple life of the middle ages—who, as modern diet radicals will be interested to learn, originated the no-breakfast idea—had their principal meal at 10 o'clock. The Romans of the Augustan age dined at 2 or 3; Horace and Maecenas, more luxurious, waited till sunset. The Elizabethans stood for the noon dinner; the eighteenth century began and belles put off the event till 5. The subject is inviting, but too large for brief discussion. Another Teufelsdröckh is needed to wrestle with it. Shall not food have its philosophy as well as clothes?

THE GENTLEST ART.

If there is one art that should not be cried down, scorned silently, hunted or pursued, even in these hurried days of practical things, it is the leisurely art of letter-writing, the "gentlest art," as it has been fitly called. Without the ability to linger pleasantly along the byways of life, to gossip by post without unseemly haste, letter-writing becomes merely correspondence, a formal thing of businesslike proclivities, a brief cold evidencing of necessity a curt acknowledgment that questions asked must be answered, and answered in the quickest possible manner, a manner that covers a niggardly space of paper. Not that questions should remain unanswered, nor information left for blind fate to disclose. One can readily understand the domestic exasperation chronicled by the wife of the stately rector in "Cranford": "Hobbes verres sent me by my honored husband. I thought to have had a letter about killing the pig, but must wait." This is the remedy. Regard a letter as a pleasure: write to loved friends, and write in a way worthy of their friendship. "Embroider your letters!" Even practical, ponderous Dr. Johnson begged Mrs. Thrale to continue her piquant bantering, her making pleasantly much of the small things of life. Such were the letters of the imaginative Madame de Sevigne, of frankly gossiping Walpole, of quaint Lamb, of gentle Fanny Burney, and such are the letters which will, for all time, remain the world's models. It is a gift bestowed directly upon a few chosen mortals only. But it can be cultivated by desire and time and patient care, and lucky is the woman numbering among her friends one who possesses the enviable art of "writing endlessly upon nothing."

EAGLETS.

Charles A. McDonald, the well known lawyer and leading Democrat of the Twenty-fifth ward, deserves to be elected Judge of the Superior court next fall.

George M. Welchelt is popular with the Republican rank and file of the Thirty-first senatorial district and his nomination for representative will prove a winning one.

Edward Osgood Brown is the logical man for the Democrats to nominate for the vacancy on the Circuit court bench.

Charles S. Thornton, who was one of the best Corporation Counsel Chicago ever had, would prove a winner if he would accept a nomination by the Democrats for Superior Court Judge.

John K. Prindiville, the popular attorney and former magistrate, is in line for nomination and election to the Municipal Court bench.

Henry L. Hertz is daily adding to his big army of friends and admirers by the able and conscientious record he is making as Collector of Internal Revenue.

Homer E. Tinsman, the able lawyer and former alderman, will grace a seat in the Superior court bench.

Charles Gastfield, popular member of the County Civil Service Board and former City Clerk, is being boomed by his many friends for a place on the Democratic county ticket.

Eugene L. McGarry, one of the most popular Democrats in the Twenty-fifth Ward, is being boomed by his big army of friends for Sanitary Trustee. The Democrats could not name a better man. Mr. McGarry is a man of ability, with a clean and successful business record to his credit, and is qualified in every way for the position. He would prove a winner at the polls.

H. E. L. Doggett, the well-known and highly respected real estate man and leading Democrat, would serve the people well as a member of the Board of Assessors.

No man in Illinois is thought of more to-day by the people than Albert J. Hopkins, who represented them so honestly and fearlessly for six years in the United States Senate.

County Surveyor Edgar A. Rosalter has proven himself to be an energetic, capable and courteous official at all times. He deserves the widespread popularity he enjoys throughout Chicago and Cook county.

No man on the bench in Cook County stands higher in the estimation of the people than Judge George Kersten.

Benjamin F. Nicholson's splendid record as a lawyer, coupled with his widespread popularity in Chicago would make his candidacy for Superior court judge on the Republican ticket next fall a winning one.
